FACTSHEET

Elective Home Education (EHE) Information for Schools

What is Elective Home Education

Elective home education is a choice by parents to provide education for their children at home instead of sending them to school full-time. This is different from education provided by a local authority for children who are too ill to attend school.

Parents who choose EHE take on the full financial responsibility, including costs for tutors, parent groups, alternative provision, and examinations.

Under the Education Act 1996, parents, and guardians, including those who choose to home educate, are responsible for ensuring that the education provided is efficient, full-time, and suitable for the child's age, ability, aptitude, and any special educational needs.

Parents are not required to provide a broad and balanced curriculum and do not have to follow the National Curriculum. There is no requirement for a home-educated child to receive professional tuition or undertake any public examinations.

What should a school do if they become aware that a parent is considering Elective Home Education

Inform parents of legal duties: Direct them to the guidance for parents: Elective Home Education Guidance.

Discuss examination options: Especially for children nearing Key Stage 4, discuss public examinations and associated costs This can be around £300 to £400 per exam privately.

Careers advice: Offer career advice to help the child and parent understand the implications of home education.

Return to school options: Explain the options to the parents stating that, if a school place is required in the future, a vacancy might not be available at the existing school.

Contact the Local Authority: Speak to the Buckinghamshire Council Elective Home Education Team for advice before the final decision is made.
